Part 3 Reading

Read the text about remakes. For questions 23 to 27, choose the correct answer (maximum – 10 points).

Make it Again

In the motion picture industry, remakes are a fact of life. They have been with us almost from the birth of the art form and as long as good fresh story material is scarce, they will remain.

A remade movie doesn't have to be a bad movie. Produced with a talented cast, a capable director, an intelligent screen-play, an ample budget, and, most important, good judgement, these pictures can be thoroughly entertaining and, in some cases, surpass the quality of the original.

Film-makers are not absolutely opposed to the practice, although there are a couple of schools of thought on the subject.

Henry Blanke, who has produced many "second editions" in his time declares: "Never remake a picture that was previously successful. Remake one that was miscast, miswritten, or misdirected. In other words, a flop."

Producer H.B. Wallis takes the opposite viewpoint: "If you have a good piece of material that has not been filmed for a number of years, there is probably a brand-new audience for it. So, I wouldn't hesitate to re-do a script with a new set of characters."

- 23. When did remakes appear?
- A. nowadays
- B. almost from the birth of the art
- C. 50 years ago

24. What is necessary for a good remake?

- A. talented actors
- B. money
- C. a good team, favourable reviews

25. What film is good for remaking?

- A. a picture that was previously successful
- B. a strongly criticized film
- C. a flop

26. Why can it be necessary to remake a film?

- A. for new audience
- B. for earning money
- C. for repeating success

27. In what way can a remake be done?

- A. to change the setting of the script
- B. to repeat the script and the characters
- C. to rewrite the script using different characters
