Young people's startups festival

K3+ SA
I'd like to present my opinion on a curious festival I visited yesterday: a festival of young people's startups. It is an event organised specifically for people with wide imagination and a desire to start their own business.

Though there were many different startup ideas, my personal favourite is the one that will forever remain the "solar phone". It wasn't appreciated by the public, but I believe it will gain its righteous recognition. Basically, the solar phone is a smartphone that charges from solar energy. It is as functional as a normal mobile phone. As for the impact that this innovation will certainly make on society, I think it will be massive. Its unique ^{way} of charging brings no harm to the environment, unlike ~~the~~ smartphones that need the Earth's resources to charge.

There are many different challenges faced by young startups. For example, one may have a great idea, but no sponsorship, therefore their idea is not recognized. Also, their ideas might be stolen or simply presented earlier than they did, by someone else.

"Excellent idea," one of the visitors said. "It is great that such events exist." That's what an elderly grandpa said about this festival. I gladly agree with his statement.

In the end, ~~to summarize it~~ To wrap it up, I believe such festivals are important to young people. There are more advantages than disadvantages that youngsters face along the way to success, so it is worth it in the end.
